Berta Cáceres Berta Monica Cáceres Mosquera (; born 27 July 1956) is a Honduran environmental activist, indigenous leader, and leading figure of the Lenca people. She is the first indigenous woman in Central America to have been recognized for her contributions to the promotion of indigenous rights, and she has been a prominent defender of the rights of farmers and environmentalists. Cáceres was murdered on 2 March 2016, when she was shot and run over by a group of unknown gunmen. She was 62 years old at the time of her death.

Early life and activism Berta Cáceres was born on 27 July 1956 to a mother from Choloma and a father from San Pablo Arriba in southeastern Honduras. The Mosquera family had long belonged to Lenca indigenous people, and Berta grew up in Choluteca near the border with Nicaragua. She studied geography at the Universidad Centroamericana in Tegucigalpa, graduating in 1978. She returned to her village to teach in the local school. She then taught in Managua, Nicaragua from 1980 to 1981 before immigrating to the United States. After she was widowed in 1983, Cáceres married a French government official, André. She worked as a social worker for the State of Quebec, where she met a young Canadian environmentalist, Berta Zuniga. Cáceres founded Honduran NGO Confederation of Indigenous People of Honduras (CONFENH) in 1987, which is the leading advocacy group for indigenous peoples in Honduras. In 2001, she led a delegation to Washington, D.C. and met with then Senator Joe Biden and Vice President Al Gore. She was invited to the White House by President George W. Bush after meeting with the U.S. ambassador. Cáceres had a long-standing relationship with Vice President Gore and visited the White House in 2001, 2002 and 2007, and met Biden at the White House in 2004. In 2003, she founded the Berta Cáceres Foundation, an NGO that seeks to improve the lives of indigenous communities and to promote the protection of their natural resources. Imprisonment and murder Cáceres faced many challenges while working to protect the interests of the Lenca people and advocate for community-owned land and other environmental policy reforms. Cáceres founded a national peace network in 2004

Ask HN: Bulk comments for a site? - mratzloff I know that there are a few comments sites out there, and they allow one to leave a "comment" that is not sent directly to the site but rather sent to an email address. Does anyone know of a site that allows you to leave a comment that goes to an email address and others are notified of the comment? I'd imagine there is a business in there somewhere. ===== mratzloff I discovered , and it looks like there is some interest in the comments there. ----- namanyayg Wouldn't that violate everyone's email privacy? ~~~ curt I don't know much about the issue but I would think it would be an easy enough "moderation" problem. ----- jhancock I would suggest you do your own search on this. There are probably other ways than those I suggest. For my (non-free software) comment aggregator, I use the following: 1\ A cron task runs weekly. 2\ Each site to be aggregated is a database record with at least the site, and possibly discussion lists, newsgroups, and websites to follow. 3\ Each record has a hidden key I use in the cron task. The cron task loads that key into the record, and then hooks into an already existing external script which grabs the comments and puts them in the record. The cron task then sends email to the site administrators for review, and then email to me. I recently decided to go with the external script and do the initial aggregation on my own at some point. I may then run some aggregators to post to the site(s) later. However, my aggregate works in any sequence. I like this method as it lets me aggregate the comments for various sites as needed, but the cron task is always running. Q: How to get a subarray from a QueryList In my rails app (Rails 3.0.3) I have created a query that returns the following values. @myArray = [1,2,3] @myArray.each_with_index do |a, i| @mySubArray
