Greek Church as “heretical.” It’s a brief document — just two pages, and it doesn’t directly refer to the Greek Church of Antioch — but it provides an excellent overview of what is meant by a heretical rite. In it, the Vatican documents: ... the consideration of the rites celebrated in churches which, apart from the Rite of Christian Initiation of Adults (RCIA), do not conform with the form found in the Byzantine Liturgy for the Orthodox Christian. In these cases, the faithful are not catechized in the faith and this results in a non-orthodox religious association and an erroneous way of thinking. The matter is of great importance, since it is necessary to preserve the fullness of the faith of the entire Christian community. Thus the Vatican is saying that the Greek Rite (preserved by a minority of the Antiochian Orthodox Church) involves the faithful in a heretical form of worship. And what is this heretical form of worship? Given the Vatican’s 20th-century struggle with ecumenism — and its inter-faith dialogues and attempts at interfaith joint actions — the Vatican has a legal and historical interest in documenting forms of worship that are not on the Vatican’s approved list. Within Orthodox Christianity, rites that are not on the Vatican’s approved list — the Byzantine Rite — form the majority, and are dominant within the Greek Catholic Church (which is not in full communion with Rome). Lest the Vatican be misunderstood, the document refers to rites which are not approved by the Roman Pontiff, but it does not at all say that there are no approved rites. One should note, too, that when the Vatican speaks of Orthodox rites, it is making a linguistic distinction. It is describing forms of worship that do not conform to the Latin liturgical

The purpose of the current study was to examine emotional regulation as a mediator of the relationship between positive maternal verbal affect and patterns of infant attachment security. A total of 25 mothers and their term infants participated in the current study. At 5 months of age, mothers completed a battery of questionnaires assessing maternal verbal affect, maternal psychological variables, infant attachment security, and emotional regulation. A structural equation model was conducted to test a model in which maternal verbal affect had a direct effect on infant attachment security, and this effect was mediated by emotional regulation. The results indicated that maternal verbal affect has a direct effect on attachment security, and that higher levels of maternal verbal affect were associated with higher levels of infant attachment security via the mediator of emotional regulation. The results support the hypothesis that emotion-focused parent-child interactions play a central role in the development of infant attachment security.
