Despite the long dry spells of summer, the Crocus blossoms are out in full force at the Monmouth National Cemetery. With the first lupine in bloom, the picnic area was full of beautiful blooms. A visit to the s show at the Crocus Festival helps to kindle the flower's springtime spirit, and encourages visitors to create some of their own at home. Now is the time to get creative and take advantage of the spring beauty. Preparing for the festival at the Monmouth National Cemetery. This photo was taken in July of 2010. My guest on the show is Kara Drotar, a qualified mortician and a board member of the American Association of Death Care Attendants. You can't be sure where the Crocus bloom is going to show up this time of year. Its somewhat random, and a good example of how temperamental these blooms are. Here's a photo that I took in April of 2012 of the Crocus I was walking by when I picked this one. It is an interesting object, but I was not quite sure if it was already blooming at the time of the photo, or was it a late bloomer. If I remember correctly it did start to bloom around the end of May. But that's not always the case. The photo was taken at about 7:00 in the morning. I picked this one as it was right next to the place where I was sitting, and very close to where the people were gathering. I wanted it to give us a feel for the personality of this place, and the fact that it was right next to a group of people. I've taken quite a few of these 'neighborhood' shots, but this is one of the more obvious ones. As you would expect, this stone is greenish, with some quartz flecks. It is fairly rounded in the middle and flat on both ends. I have noticed that many of the residential stone markers that you see at the Monmouth Cemetery are somewhat smaller than they would be if the stone was new. Of course over time the stones will get larger, but the fact that many of the stones are small when they are first set in the ground tells us that they were removed from somewhere and put back into the ground as quickly as possible. We all want to have a traditional stone laying ceremony. You may ask, why does it have to be so elaborate and fancy? Well
